I am a consultant with a strategy consulting firm, primarily serving high technology companies. On reviewing the Proposed Final Judgement in United States v. Microsoft (PFJ), I strongly believe that the PFJ is an ineffective remedy for Microsoft's unlawful conduct. My first major concern is that the language of the PFJ provides opportunities for Microsoft to continue its activities, even while conforming to the letter of the agreement. My second major concern is that the PFJ does not provide coverage for non-commercial software developers - a potentially significant source of innovation and competition. I urge that the PFJ not be accepted as is.

Thank you for your consideration,

Peter Low
